

HEALING FOR THE HOMES SERIES

GOD, I'M ANGRY WITH YOU

Pour out your heart before Him.

— PSALM 62:8

Overcomers
Global Network
EDUCATE , EQUIP , EVOLVE

BY JOSHUA MATTHEWS

DEDICATION

This booklet is dedicated to every believer who is carrying anger toward God but is afraid to say it out loud. You prayed and heaven seemed silent. You trusted and life still fell apart. You obeyed and still suffered. The anger is real. And God is not afraid of it. But He does not want you to stay there. He wants to meet you in the middle of it — and heal the wound behind it.

A MESSAGE FROM THE FOUNDER

Dear Reader,

Anger toward God is one of the most common — and most hidden — struggles in the body of Christ. Many believers feel it but refuse to admit it because they believe it is sinful to be angry at God. So they push it underground, where it becomes bitterness, numbness, or quiet spiritual withdrawal.

The truth is, God is not threatened by your honesty. He already knows what you feel. He would rather you bring your anger before His throne than bury it in silence where it rots into something far more dangerous.

In this booklet, I will walk you through what the Scriptures teach about honest lament, how to process anger toward God without falling into rebellion, and how to allow the Lord to heal the wound that is driving the rage. This is not permission to stay angry. This is a pathway from anger to trust, from lament to surrender, and from pain to peace.

Joshua Matthews\nFounder, Overcomers Global Network

With all my love in Christ,

Joshua Matthews

Founder, Overcomers Global Network

The Cry of the Soul

You prayed. You believed. You did what you thought was right. And still — the diagnosis came. The relationship ended. The child went astray. The job was lost. The person you loved died. The promise you held onto seemed to evaporate without explanation.

And somewhere in the wreckage, a feeling began to rise that you were not expecting and did not want: anger. Not at the circumstances. Not at other people. At God.

"Why did You let this happen? Where were You? I trusted You. I obeyed You. I sacrificed for You. And this is what I get?"

The anger might be white-hot — a raging fire of questions and accusations. Or it might be ice-cold — a quiet withdrawal from prayer, from worship, from trust. Either way, the result is the same: distance from God, not because He moved, but because you turned your back in pain.

Many believers feel deep shame about this anger. They have been taught that questioning God is sinful, that anger toward Him is rebellion, that a good Christian should simply accept everything with quiet submission. And so they shove the anger down, paste on a smile, and continue going through the motions of faith while internally, they are screaming.

But suppressed anger does not disappear. It becomes bitterness. It becomes numbness. It becomes a wall between you and the Father that grows thicker with every passing day.

God has a better way. And it begins with honesty.

What the Bible Says

The Bible is full of people who brought their raw, unfiltered emotions before God — including anger, disappointment, and accusation. God did not strike them down for their honesty. In many cases, He drew closer to them because of it.

David wrote:

""How long, O Lord? Will You forget me forever? How long will You hide Your face from me? How long shall I take counsel in my soul, having sorrow in my heart daily? How long will my enemy be exalted over me?""

— Psalm 13:1–2 (NKJV)

"Will You forget me forever?" That is not polite, measured prayer. That is raw lament from a man who felt abandoned by God. And this psalm is in the Holy Scriptures — preserved by God for generations — which means God is not offended by honest grief. He included it in His Word for people like you.

The prophet Habakkuk cried out with similar frustration:

""O Lord, how long shall I cry, and You will not hear? Even cry out to You, 'Violence!' And You will not save. Why do You show me iniquity, and cause me to see trouble? For plundering and violence are before me; there is strife, and contention arises.""

— Habakkuk 1:2–3 (NKJV)

Habakkuk essentially said, "God, I am watching evil win and You are doing nothing about it. Why?" And God did not punish him for the question. He answered him — not always in the way Habakkuk expected, but He engaged with his honest cry.

Job lost everything — his children, his health, his wealth, his reputation — and he did not hold back his anguish:

""Why did I not die at birth? Why did I not perish when I came from the womb?""

— Job 3:11 (NKJV)

Job questioned. He lamented. He even challenged God's justice. For thirty-seven chapters, he wrestled with the silence of heaven. Yet at the end of the book, God said that Job spoke rightly about Him — more rightly than his friends who offered neat theological explanations (Job 42:7).

And even Jesus, on the cross, cried out:

""My God, My God, why have You forsaken Me?""

— Matthew 27:46 (NKJV)

The Son of God Himself expressed the anguish of feeling abandoned by the Father. If Christ can ask "Why?" from the cross, you are not sinning by bringing your "why" to God in prayer.

The Psalms give us direct instruction on what to do with overwhelming emotion:

*""Trust in Him at all times, you people; pour out your heart before Him;
God is a refuge for us.""*

— Psalms 62:8 (NKJV)

Pour out your heart. Not a sanitized version of your heart. Not the version you think God wants to hear. Your actual heart — the angry parts, the confused parts, the parts that do not trust Him right now. Pour it out. He can handle it. He is your refuge, not a fragile deity who crumbles at your honesty.

But here is the critical principle: lament must remain directed toward God, not away from Him. David poured out his anger in prayer. Habakkuk cried out to the Lord. Job stayed in conversation with God — even when the conversation was painful. They did not walk away. They pressed in. And that is the difference between honest lament and dangerous rebellion.

The Root of the Struggle

Unmet Expectations. Much of our anger toward God is rooted in expectations that were not met. We expected healing, and it did not come. We expected provision, and we suffered lack. We expected protection, and tragedy struck. We expected God to act in a specific way and on a specific timeline, and He did not.

This does not mean your expectations were wrong — many of them may have been rooted in genuine promises of Scripture. But it does mean that God's ways and timing are often different from ours:

""For My thoughts are not your thoughts, nor are your ways My ways, says the Lord. For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are My ways higher than your ways, and My thoughts than your thoughts.""

— Isaiah 55:8–9 (NKJV)

This is not a dismissive answer. It is an honest acknowledgment that God sees dimensions of reality that you cannot see. His decisions are informed by eternal purposes that are beyond your current field of vision.

Unprocessed Grief. Often, anger toward God is grief wearing a mask. Beneath the rage is devastating sadness — loss that has not been fully mourned, pain that has not been fully processed. Anger feels more powerful than grief. It gives a sense of control in a situation that feels completely out of control. But until the grief is acknowledged and processed before God, the anger will remain.

The Danger of Bitterness. Honest anger expressed to God in prayer is healthy. Anger that is buried, nursed, and allowed to harden becomes bitterness — and bitterness is spiritually destructive:

""Looking carefully lest anyone fall short of the grace of God; lest any root of bitterness springing up cause trouble, and by this many become defiled.""

— Hebrews 12:15 (NKJV)

Bitterness defiles — not just you, but those around you. It distorts your view of God, poisons your relationships, and blocks the flow of grace in your life. Anger must be processed and released before it takes root.

Instruction in the Word

The book of Psalm 73 is a masterclass in processing anger and disappointment with God. The writer, Asaph, was honest about his struggle:

*""But as for me, my feet had almost stumbled; my steps had nearly slipped.
For I was envious of the boastful, when I saw the prosperity of the wicked.""*

— Psalm 73:2–3 (NKJV)

Asaph was angry because the wicked were prospering while the righteous suffered. He felt that serving God was pointless. But then something shifted:

""Until I went into the sanctuary of God; then I understood their end.""

— Psalm 73:17 (NKJV)

When he entered God's presence, his perspective changed. He did not get a simple answer — he got a heavenly viewpoint. He began to see beyond the present moment into eternal reality. And his conclusion was powerful:

""Whom have I in heaven but You? And there is none upon earth that I desire besides You. My flesh and my heart fail; but God is the strength of my heart and my portion forever.""

— Psalm 73:25–26 (NKJV)

Notice the journey: anger → honesty → entering God's presence → new perspective → surrender → worship. This is the pattern. You do not resolve anger toward God by suppressing it or by walking away from Him. You resolve it by bringing it into His presence and allowing Him to shift your perspective.

James also gives instruction about how to handle anger in a godly way:

""So then, my beloved brethren, let every man be swift to hear, slow to speak, slow to wrath; for the wrath of man does not produce the righteousness of God.""

— James 1:19–20 (NKJV)

Human wrath — left unchecked and unsubmitted — does not produce God's righteousness in your life. It must be brought under the authority of the Spirit and processed through prayer, not allowed to fester into bitterness or drive you from God's presence.

Christ's Healing and Restoring Power

The writer of Lamentations — in the midst of unspeakable national destruction — penned these words that have anchored millions of souls in seasons of pain:

""Through the Lord's mercies we are not consumed, because His compassions fail not. They are new every morning; great is Your faithfulness. 'The Lord is my portion,' says my soul, 'therefore I hope in Him!'"

— Lamentations 3:22–24 (NKJV)

Even in the rubble — even in the middle of devastation and unanswered questions — the writer chose to hope in God. Not because everything made sense. Not because the pain was gone. But because he chose to trust God's character over his own circumstances.

This is where healing begins. Not with understanding. Not with answers to every "why." But with a decision to trust God's heart even when you cannot trace His hand.

Jesus understands suffering. He is not a God who sits above human pain and observes from a distance. He entered it. He felt it. He wept at the tomb of Lazarus (John 11:35). He sweat drops of blood in Gethsemane (Luke 22:44). He cried out on the cross in agony.

""For we do not have a High Priest who cannot sympathize with our weaknesses, but was in all points tempted as we are, yet without sin. Let us therefore come boldly to the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy and find grace to help in time of need.""

— Hebrews 4:15–16 (NKJV)

He sympathizes. He understands. And He invites you to come — not when you have it all figured out, not when you are no longer angry, but now, in the middle of the mess, to find mercy and grace.

The goal is not to pretend everything is fine. The goal is to let God heal the wound behind the anger. And He will — if you let Him in.

Practical Steps to Walk Forward

1. Be honest with God. Tell Him exactly what you feel. Do not sanitize it. He already knows. Give yourself permission to lament — in prayer, in journaling, in worship. Bring the anger into His presence rather than carrying it away from Him.

2. Stay in conversation with God. The most dangerous thing you can do is stop talking to Him. Anger that stays in dialogue remains manageable. Anger that goes silent becomes bitterness. Even if your prayers are raw and messy — keep praying.

3. Grieve what you have lost. Beneath the anger is usually grief. Give yourself permission to mourn — the loss, the disappointment, the shattered expectation. Weep before God. He collects your tears (Psalm 56:8).

4. Read the Psalms of lament. Psalm 13, Psalm 22, Psalm 42, Psalm 73, Psalm 88 — these are prayers written by people in pain. Let them give you language for what you feel. Pray them as your own.

5. Choose to trust what you know over what you feel. You may not feel that God is good right now. But what does His Word say? His Word says He is good, faithful, just, merciful, and sovereign. Choose to stand on what is revealed, even when your emotions are in turmoil.

6. Submit your anger to God. There comes a point where you must release the anger — not stuff it down, but consciously hand it over. Say, "Lord, I am angry. I do not understand. But I choose to trust You anyway. I release my demand for answers and I submit to Your wisdom."

7. Guard against bitterness. Check your heart regularly. If anger is hardening into resentment toward God, name it and repent. Bitterness will defile every area of your life if left unaddressed.

8. Seek community. Find a trusted pastor, counselor, or mature believer who will listen without judgment. Processing anger alone is far more difficult than processing it with the support of wise and compassionate people.

9. Wait for perspective. Many of the things we rage against in the moment become clear with time. Joseph did not understand his suffering until decades later. You may not understand yours today — but God is faithful, and He wastes nothing.

Healing Prayer

A Prayer for the Angry Heart

Father, I am angry. I am not going to pretend I am not. You know what happened. You know what I lost. You know the prayers I prayed that seemed to bounce off the ceiling. And I do not understand why. Lord, I bring this anger to You — not as rebellion, but as honesty. I trust You with my rage the same way I trust You with my worship. Hold me in this moment. Do not let my anger become bitterness. Do not let my disappointment drive me from Your presence. I choose to stay in conversation with You, even when I do not have peace yet. Meet me here, Lord. In Jesus' name, amen.

A Prayer of Surrender

Lord, I release my demand for answers. I release my timeline. I release my expectation of how things should have gone. I submit to Your sovereignty — not because I understand it, but because I trust Your character. You are good even when life is not. You are faithful even when circumstances seem unfair. I lay down my anger and I pick up trust. Not because I feel like it — but because I choose to. Hold me steady, Father. Help my unbelief. In Jesus' name, amen.

A Deliverance Prayer

In the name of Jesus Christ, I take authority over every spirit of bitterness, rage, and offense that has been working in my heart against God. I will not allow the enemy to use my pain as a foothold to separate me from my Father. I break the power of bitterness over my life. I break the cycle of anger that has been poisoning my relationship with God. I command every demonic assignment designed to drive me away from the Lord to be cancelled by the blood of Jesus. I am being healed. I am being restored. My anger is becoming prayer, and my prayer is leading me back to peace. In Jesus' mighty name, amen.

Prophetic Declarations

"My anger will become prayer, not rebellion."

"God is not afraid of my honesty. I will pour out my heart before Him."

"I choose trust over understanding. I choose faith over sight."

"Bitterness will not take root in my heart. I submit my anger to God."

"The Lord is healing the wound behind my anger."

"I will not walk away from God. I will walk toward Him — even in pain."

"Through the Lord's mercies I am not consumed. Great is His faithfulness."

"My lament is leading me to a deeper place of surrender."

"God is good, even when I cannot see it yet. I trust His heart."

"This season will not destroy me. It will refine me."

Reflection Questions

Reflect on These Questions

1. What are you angry at God about? Be completely honest — He already knows.
2. Have you been burying your anger or expressing it to God in prayer? What has been the result?
3. Beneath the anger, is there grief you have not yet allowed yourself to feel? What have you lost?
4. Has your anger begun to harden into bitterness or spiritual withdrawal? What warning signs do you notice?
5. Read Psalm 73. Where are you in Asaph's journey — in the anger, in the entering of God's presence, or in the surrender?
6. Are you willing to choose trust today, even without full answers? What would that look like practically?
7. Who can you talk to about what you are going through — a pastor, a counselor, a mature friend?

Child of God, your anger does not disqualify you. It means you are human, and you are in pain. But do not let pain become a permanent address. Bring it to the Father. Stay in conversation with Him. Let Him meet you in the honest place. He is near to the brokenhearted — and He is near to you right now.

A CLOSING PRAYER

Father God, in the name of Jesus Christ, I bring before You this reader who is carrying anger in their heart toward You. Lord, You know the pain behind that anger. You know what happened — the loss, the disappointment, the unanswered prayer, the suffering that seemed senseless. You see it all.

I ask You, Lord, to meet them right now. Not with rebuke. Not with lecture. But with Your presence — the kind of presence that melts anger and replaces it with trust. Heal the wound, Lord. Answer the questions You choose to answer and give them grace for the questions that remain.

I decree that their anger will not become bitterness. I decree that their honest questions will lead them deeper into faith, not further from it. I decree that the God who is near to the brokenhearted is near to them right now. In Jesus' name, amen.

AN INVITATION TO CHRIST

If you have never given your life to Jesus Christ, or if anger has driven you away from God, this is your invitation to come home — not when you feel less angry, but right now, in the middle of it. Pray: "Lord Jesus, I am angry and I am hurting, but I am choosing You anyway. I believe You died for me and rose again. I give You my pain, my questions, and my life. Be my Lord and Savior. I will learn to trust You even when I do not understand. Fill me with Your Holy Spirit and heal what is broken in me. In Jesus' name, amen."

OVERCOMERS GLOBAL NETWORK

Visit us online: <https://www.overcomersglobalnetwork.com/>

Visit OGN University for free online courses for your journey in Christ:

<https://www.ognuniversity.com/>

Visit us in person and witness and testify of the power of God:

7519 Mentor Ave Suite A106, Mentor, OH 44060

HEALING FOR THE HOMES SERIES

GOD, I'M ANGRY WITH YOU

Some wounds leave a person wrestling with God in disappointment, grief, and unanswered questions.

This Healing for the Homes booklet is written for the reader who feels hurt, confused, or even angry with the Lord. Through scripture, lament, honesty, and prayer, Joshua Matthews helps the reader bring hidden emotions into the presence of God and discover healing, understanding, and renewed trust.

God is not afraid of your honest cry.

Overcomers
Global Network
EDUCATE , EQUIP , EVOLVE

By Joshua Matthews

Visit us online: overcomersglobalnetwork.com

Free online courses: ognuniversity.com

Visit us in person: 7519 Mentor Ave Suite A106, Mentor, OH 44060